We have all spent a lot of time indoors at home in the last year. Enjoying life's simple pleasures has been a way to manage COVID-19 restrictions. Finding a way to relax has been more important than ever, and nature can bring much relief. Stepping away from screens and connecting with nature can offer peace while you observe and learn. IU13 and Lancaster County Parks want to offer a special day for families, offering resources that allow you to explore your yard, your neighborhood, and local parks. Naturalist Lisa Sanchez will share how we can learn a great deal about our environment by watching and recording our observations. Using Dr. Carol Welsh's Four-Color Analysis, we will explore how to deepen the journaling experience - no matter the topic and no matter your age or ability. Discovering life in the woods and creek through short hikes and independent journaling will be a perfect way to spend a summer day. Websites and practical resources will be shared for use after this session, so your family can learn together in new ways this summer.

Remember, dress for hiking outside because you can't fully enjoy nature sitting inside! To ensure a safe experience for all, we will meet at Pavilion 11 and remain outdoors throughout the day. Registrants will receive an email with more information.
